DAILY BRIEF

*USSR-Berlin: After a four-day respite, coinciding with a Soviet holiday weekend, the USSR has again filed flight plans for transport movements in the Berlin corridors on 27 February. The resumption of Soviet flights, and the filing of flight plans rather than a return to the blanket reservations used earlier, suggests that for the present Moscow is mainly interested in keeping its position intact by periodically asserting a right to use the corridors at times and places of its own choosing.

According to the Soviet flight plan, two aircraft are to transit the northern corridor from the Berlin area at altitudes of 2,500 and 4,500 feet at 15-minute intervals beginning at 0315 EST and are to leave the west end of the corridor by 0414 EST. Two other aircraft are to fly the southern corridor eastward from Eisenach at 5,000 and 7,000 feet at 15-minute intervals beginning 0431 EST and will leave the corridor in the Berlin area by 0559 EST.

This is the fourth occasion since 20 February on which the Soviets have used the tactic of filing flight plans for corridor flights. These plans for 27 February differ from previous ones in that two corridors are to be involved on the same day and two of the aircraft are to begin their flights from the western end of the corridor.

USSR - North Vietnam: During the past year the Soviet Union delivered three modern submarine chasers, twelve motor torpedo boats, and four patrol craft to the North Vietnamese Navy. These transfers have increased the number of North Vietnam's modern naval craft by over 50 percent and have substantially strengthened its capabilities for combat in inshore waters. Concurrently, supporting shore facilities have been strengthened, particularly in the area just north of the South Vietnamese border, thus improving Hanoi's ability to conduct small-scale naval operations in South Vietnamese waters. Prior to 1961 Hanoi had acquired nearly all of its newer naval units--30 motor gunboats--from Communist China.

Tanks were moved in to protect the palace shortly after the attack and traffic continues to move in Saigon under military control. Two airborne battalions have taken control of the Saigon and Bien Hoa airports and the Saigon radio is under the control of the psychological warfare chief. Diem, who broadcast a message announcing his safety, left shortly thereafter on a scheduled provincial tour.

As of 0400 EST this morning, there has been no reaction to the attack on the part of Hanoi radio or the Viet Cong forces in South Vietnam.
